

RE-ENTRY FACTS

After inmates complete their incarceration, significant barriers remain to their successful re-entry to society. CoreCivic is committed to breaking down those barriers — beginning on day one of our interaction with every individual in our facilities.

THE CHALLENGE: RECIDIVISM

1.6 million

people are currently in the U.S. corrections system, and almost all of them will eventually re-enter our communities.

95%

of inmates in state prisons will at some point be released back into the community.

3 OUT OF 4

released inmates will be arrested again, and more than half of all inmates will return to prison soon after release.

65%

of the U.S. prison population is classified as having alcohol or other drug abuse and addiction.

68%

of state prison inmates did not receive a high school diploma.

...while in prison are less likely to return. And investments in reducing recidivism provide overall economic benefit.

Inmates who obtain GEDs while in prison are up to 30% less likely to return to prison. (RAND Corporation)

Inmates who complete addiction treatment in prison are 50% less likely to return to prison. (California Department of Corrections and Rehabilitation)

Inmates who complete vocational training are 28% more likely to find a job after release. (RAND Corporation)

Connecting 100 formerly incarcerated individuals with employment would produce $1.2 million in annual earnings and $55 million in post-release lifetime earnings for a city. (Economic League of Greater Philadelphia)

CoreCivic's Commitments

A focus on re-entry provides great benefits for our communities — more people living healthy and productive lives and contributing to strong local economies. As an organization, CoreCivic is committed to focus more on re-entry in order to meet the changing needs of our government partners.

CoreCivic expects to graduate more than 12,000 inmates with high school educations by the end of 2019.

Over the next five years, CoreCivic will provide addiction treatment at no less than a 60% completion rate.

4,000 inmates will complete CoreCivic's victim impact program over the next three years.

CoreCivic expects to award more than 25,000 industry-recognized certificates by the end of 2019.

Over the next five years, CoreCivic will enroll between 1,900 and 2,300 inmates in faith-based residential programs and achieve a 95% completion rate for those who participate.
